Communication is so much cut off on the left bank, that it is next to impossible to learn whether the breaks are widening or being closed. The steamer Empire unfortunately was detained to a late hour yesterday evening. We say unfortunately because most of the crevasse closing material was ordered to be shipped on that loat, and no one steamboat or tng could have got it aboard in much less time. Thus there was great delay in getting the requisite lumber, scantling, hay, etc., to the points where they were uceded. There is great danger in delay where crevasses are concerned. The steamer Hensley, at latest accounts, was assisting in convey-ing materials from point to point, and her crew were accupled at times in helping work at the breaks. Both of the e poats will be some time down the coast, transferring materials such as lumber, etc. On both sides of the river several hundred acres of rice have been lost already, irretrievably unless the water goes down in "lime to let the destroyed fields be replanted.

Mr. Mulkey says: "The river is slowly rising from Vicksburg down, according to the re-ports of the people, who are night and day keeping watch on the levees. We arrived at Baton Rouge last evening at half-past seven, and while there, at halfpast eight, the alarm bells were rung, creating great excitement and alarm ome saying the levee had broken, and others yedling fire. The engines turned out to hunt the fire, but by this time the ant, and the track in fair condition loud-roaring waters were heard at Mc-Collum's, tearing through a crevasse. Great excitement prevailed up to our departure, and though assistance went from the city, no hopes were entertained of saving the levee.
